

Dear Ann. Effen my deare and unfained loue doth dearely salute thee and all deare friends with thee. In thou hast bene often in my remembrance sinto I sawe thy face in the out ward but I can truly say thou art so near and deare unto mee and when I call to mind the daye and yeare by you and howe the lord hath preserved a litle remnant. when we was but young in yeare and tender in the truth then did the lord appeare for to pleat his owne cause in the face of all his and our enemies yet he plot with all our foes both within and without all for hee made the way pleasant before us therefore deare heart let the true confidance of this your loue of our god reute bee for you and us but let it bee as a fault upon our heart and as brafflets upon our armes never to bee for gotten by any of us that truly feare the living lord god of life and your deare all remember my deare loue unto Christifor holder and his wife. my deare loue doth dearely salute them both in that never change th doe I reach unto you all. my deare friends in the part as though I named them one by one my loue doth reach unto you all my dearely beloved friends in the lord Jesus. wher our canytic stands not in words but in power and in the demoustration of the holy spirit of our god which hee hath given unto every one more who hath made one in Christ Jesus our lord and onely saviour in whom we have believed and in whom all the spirit one doth trust and one whom the doo so by yeare for us the few daye we have one this side the grave that god would may all lay downe our heds in speere with our mates which is the desire of your sisters and the braying of my spirit for you all as for my owne soule that god may bee glorified in you all and by you all doe fare well your friend in the eternall truth of our god

Joan Burroughs

Little Normanston

the 23: day of: 6: month: 79:

This for Anne upon in pond of land

Faint, mostly illegible handwritten text at the top of the page, possibly a header or address.

John Brown at the Pearly in Singhafont
London

part 3

Large block of faint, illegible handwritten text in the middle section of the page.

Bottom section of the page containing faint, illegible handwritten text, possibly a signature or footer.